Jeff Quyle

Panel: Local tax

Biography

At the Association of Indiana Counties, Jeff Quyle works with board members and staff to reach consensus on policy objectives for the AIC as well as oversee the effectiveness of the administration of the trade group. As a member of the Morgan County Council, Quyle examines fiscal practices of county government and seeks to implement effective delivery of service to the public using both traditional and innovative tools, as well as try to provide leadership and education about the role local government must play in economic development in the community.

Quyle's areas of interest and expertise lie in public administration and policy analysis challenges that provide opportunities to improve the delivery of services to clients.

Quyle received a B.A. in Political Science, Religion and History from Wittenberg University in 1981. He went on to receive a M.P.A. in Public Policy from Indiana University Bloomington in 1985.
